

The ASALH Book Prize

for the best new book in African American history and culture

The Association for the Study of African American Life and History (ASALH) awards an annual prize to recognize an outstanding book in the field of African American history and culture. Books must engage archives in order to be eligible for consideration, however, the book prize committee invites submissions from across disciplinary and interdisciplinary boundaries.

The ASALH Book Prize committee is interested in projects that model rigorous and imaginative approaches to this field of study; books that are beautifully written; books that have clear implications for how we teach and represent specific aspects of African American history and culture; books that have the capacity to introduce important aspects of African American experiences to broad publics; books that use sharp analyses of African American history and culture to speak boldly to the contemporary moment; books that engage with new and/or previously underutilized archives; and books that use particular experiences in African American history and culture to illuminate universal aspects of the human experience.

NOTE: ASALH also co-sponsors an annual book award with the American Historical Association. This is the Wesley-Logan Prize for historical scholarship on the African Diaspora Selection Committee: co-chairs Gerald Horne (Professor, University of Houston) and Ula Taylor (Professor, UC Berkeley), and jurors Elizabeth Todd-Breland (Assoc. Professor, University of Illinois-Chicago), Christopher Tinson (Assoc. Professor, St. Louis University), and Kellie Carter-Jackson (Assoc. Professor, Wellesley College).

Eligibility

1. Books with a 2021 copyright date are eligible for the 2022 award. Bound page proofs can be considered for books published after October 2021 (though published book should be mailed to jurors by January 1, 2022).
2. Book nominations can be made by an author or by a university or trade press publisher. Publishers may submit multiple entries.
3. Textbooks, juvenile literature, documentary collections, fiction, poetry, and collections of essays are not eligible.

Submission Process

1. Submit book titles using the link below. Deadline for submission of book titles is September 15, 2021. (No book will be considered without the book submission form)
