

INAUGURAL DIRECTOR, CENTER FOR RACIAL JUSTICE AND EQUITABLE FUTURES CORNELL UNIVERSITY
ITHACA, NEW YORK

Cornell University seeks a visionary and highly collaborative leader and accomplished scholar to be the Inaugural Director of the Center for Racial Justice and Equitable Futures. The Director will work to develop and implement an ambitious vision for the Center's future and its commitment to path-breaking research. The new role provides an extraordinary opportunity to contribute to one of the world's great research universities, by serving as a leading voice on race, racism, indigeneity, and racialization across a wide range of scholarship.

This is a unique opportunity to engage an institution that has fully embraced the three-part mission of a land-grant university: education, research, and outreach, creating academic programs that address real-world issues while building on a traditional liberal arts foundation. As a land-grant, coeducational, and secular university with a broad curriculum and diverse student population, Cornell seeks to make a significant investment in scholarship in the area of racial justice through the development of the Center.

The Center will serve as a central node connecting and amplifying scholarship on racism, indigeneity, ethnicity, and bias across Cornell University. For the center to be successful, the Director must ensure that the scholarship of the center is firmly grounded in Cornell's academic programs. The Director will work collaboratively with faculty affiliates, deans, center and program directors, and university administration to promote Cornell's research and education mission.
