ASALH is a membership organization that needs to have dedicated support, tools, and resources. The attack on the teaching of Black History and Black life in the national climate requires ASALH's members to remain on the front lines and committed to social justice. The network of branches and the national office provide informative programs to increase awareness and educate communities-at-large about broader issues, as well as local and family histories. My Executive Council and branch experiences have provided insight into the operational structures, and relational dynamics of members to provide support and address concerns.

The development of the Branch Procedural Handbook was the result of suggestions from the membership to enable strong branches. It provides information in simple one-page topics to address most questions. The Membership Support and Enhancement Committee will continue to make the website easier to navigate. It will also focus on improving the timeliness and flow of communication for better transparency between the membership, national office, EC, and officers for responsiveness and accountability. Lastly, efforts will focus on developing strategies to promote ASALH's growth.
